

HUME-HOVELL CENTENARY.*Itinerary for Unveiling Memorials.

One hundred years ago this month the Australian explorers, Hume and Hovell, were cutting their way through unknown bush country on their overland journey from Sydney to Corio Bay. Their historic feat is being commemorated in Victoria and New South Wales by a series of centenary celebrations. In order that some permanent record of the occasion should be established, cairns are being erected along the route followed by the explorers. Committees at the different centres through which Hume and Hovell passed in Victoria are working to the end that at each town and village there shall be erected a cairn, monument, or tablet to mark the route followed by the explorers. The Victorian efforts in this direction are being amalgamated in order that a continuity of celebrations, following the original route of Hume and Hovell, shall be observed.

The series of cairns and monuments will be unveiled next week, and for this purpose a party organised by a committee, of which Sir James Barrett is chairman, will leave Melbourne this morning.
